In the Legally Speaking column last May [6], we reported on a survey conducted at last year's ACM-sponsored Conference on Computer-Human Interaction in Austin, Tex. Among the issues about which the survey inquired was whether the respondents thought patent protection should be available for various aspects of computer programs. The 667 respondents overwhelmingly supported copyright protection for source and object code although they strongly opposed copyright or patent protection for " ...

This paper addresses how intellectual property affects the Web in general, and content publishing on the Web in particular. Before its commercialization, the Web was perceived as being free and unregulated; this assumption is no longer true. Nowadays, content providers need to know which practices on the Web can result in potential legal problems. The vast majority of Web sites are developed by individual such as technical writers or graphic artists, and small organizations, which receive lim ...

Information Security programs are on the rise in colleges and universities, but the curricula are lacking a vital aspect of the information security professional: Intellectual Property. Intellectual Property (IP) is needed in a field that merges current applications and technology, yet is not often taught. IP encompasses original thought, invention, and progress; the three traditional areas of IP are copyrights, trademarks, and patents. An information security professional cannot protect his or ...

Reflecting the rapid growth in the utilization of large test collections for information retrieval since the 1990s, extensive comparative experiments have been performed to explore the effectiveness of various retrieval models. Then again, many would argue that the U.S. P ...
